Bears Look To Tampa After First Loss

Four 1976 NFL pre-season undefeateds provided proof that they are fallible over the weekend — yes the Chicago Bears included.

After three consecutive wins this year (four for Pittsburgh), the Bears joined the Steelers, Oakland and Cincinnati in losing game number one. St. Louis topped Chicago 20-14 at Soldier Field to snap the Bears win streak (over a two-year period) at four.

Chicago (3-1) now travels south to take on Tampa Bay (1-3) at 7 p.m. CDT Saturday in Tampa Stadium. Tampa lost its Homecoming Game Saturday to Miami, 28-21. This week's contest will be carried live on WBBM-TV (Channel 2, Chicago) and WGN Radio (720 AM).

Terminated Drives

The Bears looked like they were in the winning mood early in their game with St. Louis. Quarterback Bob Avellini ushered Chicago from its own 34-yard line to the Cardinals 14 in the Bears' first series. Passes to Roland Harper (17) and Greg Latta (19) highlighted the drive.

But a toss into the end zone by Avellini, intended for Ron Shanklin, was intercepted by Card corner back Norm Thompson — turnover number one.

St. Louis Gets on Scoreboard

The interception put St. Louis in motion on its own 20 and the Cardinals made that theft count. In ten plays Don Coryell's well-traveled team had seven points. Jim Hart's 28-yard pass to Mel Gray, on a third-and-three situation, kept things going. Running back Jim Otis went the final yard and Jim Bakken kicked the PAT.

The Cardinals, who had played in Tokyo only five days earlier, were tied up two minutes after their initial score. Rookie Brian Baschnagel had a 24-yard kick-off return to the Bear 30 to start things (he had a total of 149 return yards for the night).

Payton Gets TD

Three plays later back Mike Adamle dashed for 36 yards (to tie his longest NFL run) and the Bears were on the Card 25. On the next play, Walter Payton had his third exhibition touchdown with a run around right end. Bob Thomas' kick squared things at 7-all.

The Bear score came with 3:58 left in the first quarter and it would be nearly 41 minutes later before they would light the scoreboard again.

In Lead for Good

Late in the second quarter, after two unsuccessful drives by each team, Chicago again turned the ball over and again on an Avellini interception.

This time the former Maryland athlete had wide receiver Steve Schubert in his sights, but St. Louis' Roger Wehrli jammed the completion signals. Wehrli returned the ball 31 yards on the steal, to the Bear 14.

Chicago toughened-up on defense at that point and the Cardinals could manage only seven yards. As a result, Bakken came in and St. Louis settled for a 24-yard field goal and a 10-7 intermission lead. An earlier 38-yard attempt by Bakken, on the first play of the second quarter, was blocked by Bear defensive tackle Ron Rydalch.

Scoreless Third Period

The Bears were recipients of the only St. Louis turnover early in the third quarter. Back Jerry Latin was smacked by both Doug Buffone and Bill Knox on a running play and he promptly coughed up the ball. Defensive end Mike Hartenstine grabbed the fumble and the Bears took over on their own 32.

Neither team, though, was able to score in the third quarter, but the Cardinals were on their way. Time ran out in that period with St. Louis on the Bear 8-yard line. Back Steve Jones went the final eight yards just four seconds into the final period — St. Louis now led 17-7.

Bears Come Close

Another Baschnagel kick-off return (of 52 yards) meant good field position for the Bears, at the Cardinals' 38.

With QB Virgil Carter at the helm, Chicago worked a steady 6:55 to score its second touchdown. Three third-down conversions kept things alive as Tom Donchez went over left guard for the one-yard score. Rick Danneier added the PAT and it was 17-14 St. Louis with 8:01 to play.

The Cardinals added the final three points as Bakken connected from 40-yards out five-and-a-half minutes later. Now behind 20-14, Chicago tried a comeback that nearly paid off. With 2:30 left, Carter hit Payton with a pass covering 42 yards, down to the St. Louis 33. The Bears moved from there to a first down at the Cardinal 11.

But on the next play Harper fumbled and with only 39 seconds showing on the clock, St. Louis linebacker Mark Arneson recovered — the door was closed. It was the third pre-season win for the Cards against one loss. St. Louis, now, is the only team to beat the Bears (twice) in the last six Chicago games.

Pardee Reactions

"I didn't notice any jet lag on the Cardinals part tonight (referring to their Tokyo trip) — if they were tired it was from running up and down the field. They're a fine team," Bear head coach Jack Pardee said.

"It took a little out of us early making drives and getting no points. The Cardinals kept the ball — it was the same old story — they have a good (offensive) line and good backs. They wore us down in our defensive line with (Roger) Stillwell and (Gary) Hrvnak hurting. We could have taken away their middle game but that would have meant giving up other things. And of course Jim Hart was excellent on his third downs."

"I was proud of the way we came back in the fourth quarter and we had a chance to win it."

"Maybe the defensive solution for us is to get our defense helping. The Cardinals have been gaining 400 yards a week, even against Oakland. They've got a heck of an offense."

IT'S NOT ALWAYS MEANT TO BE . . . but back Roland Harper finds it hard to convince himself of that following a fumble late in the game against St. Louis. Harper carried the ball nine times for 30 yards and also caught two passes. (Photo by Bill Smith)

DON'T LOOK NOW . . . but closing in on the Cardinal's Terry Metcalf (21) are Bear safety Bill Knox (31) and linebacker Waymond Bryant (50). (Photo by Bill Smith)

Bears Future Charted by QB Carter

Whirrr! Data came spitting out of the computer as if Bears General Manager Jim Finks had programmed it himself:

The Bears are playing at 50 per cent of capacity so far this season, compared with 10 per cent of capacity a year ago. If the breaks are favorable, the club could be playing at 70 to 80 per cent of its potential at the season's end.

Bob Avellini will remain the No. 1 quarterback, but the Bears will need a strong relief man who can come off the bench in tight situations without hurting the offense.

The relief man is Virgil Carter.

Suddenly, the computer interrupted its data processing, suited up in a Bears' uniform and headed out to practice, where its calculations would bring dividends in the form of completed passes and first downs.

Compu-Athlete

The waking computer is Virgil Carter himself, the Bears' second string quarterback whose mathematical wizardry has boosted his success both in football and business ventures. With all due modesty, he figures his data on the Bears is right on beam.

In perhaps a stunning surprise to his teammates, the 30-year-old Carter quickly came out of retirement and slipped past Gary Huff into the Bears' back-up quarterback spot in training camp this summer. It was a surprise because Carter said all his goodbyes at the end of the 1975 season. He was on the verge of buying a seat on the Chicago Board of Trade when Finks lured him back to camp this June.

Carter, who literally thinks like a computer, can easily explain it.

"I think all four of the guys in camp can perform," he said of the Bears' quarterbacks, including Avellini, Huff and Jerry Tagge. "The advantage I have is that I've played before. You just can't poo-poo that. It's an important factor. Jim (Finks) and I are on the same page. We understand each other and I know my role precisely."

"I know they're looking at an 8-to-10 year rebuilding program. By that, I mean they'll win in two or three years, but they're going to be strong for 8 or 10 years. Well, you can't be strong 10 years from now with a quarterback who's 30 years old now. It's not that I can't play for several years, it's just that they've got to develop somebody who's gonna be around a long time."

"I think they're doing that with Bob Avellini. So the only opportunity in the quarterback department, until Bob proves himself one way or another is ... a relief role like they have in pitching. Great athletes come out of the bullpen. Well, that's all the Bears are looking for, a bullpen quarterback. That's fine with me. I can accept that position, and I think that's a big part of it."

Knows His Job

Carter says it doesn't even enter his mind whether he is better than Avellini because "all that would do is frustrate me."

"My position is that if Avellini goes down, and he has to miss the rest of the game, I think I can go in, recognize what the other team is doing, know what I do best, know what our team can do, and function — and hopefully win a game."

"And the next week it would not be, 'Who's going to start?' If Avellini's ready to start physically, then he'll be in there. There won't be any cloak and dagger. There won't be any hard feelings. That's just the way it's got to be for this team to develop."

At one point earlier in his career, Carter computerized his approach to football, analyzing game situations on the basis of a three million piece data bank in a study to complete his master's degree program.

Even in making his everyday decisions, the same tactical considerations are evident — such as when Finks approached Carter about playing again in 1976.

Carter had spent the off-season finding "a replacement" for football, in his activities at the Board of Trade.

"It's one of the few things that I've seen that can replace football with no remorse," he said. "The things that you learn in football are not wasted when you leave it because the discipline and the control of emotion and the thinking under pressure are all very present down on the floor. When I go to the Board of Trade on

CHARTING THE ACTION is Bear quarterback Virgil Carter. He holds a BS degree in physical and engineering sciences and an MBA in mathematics. (Photo by Bill Smith)

Monday, it's like going to the stadium on Sunday. It's a game day. And at the conclusion of the game, you see how you did on the scoreboard.

"Well, the same thing is true at the Board of Trade. You can look at the numbers and tell if you had a good day or not."

In June, while Carter was in the midst of a "dynamite" month of profit-making during some of his first substantial cash plunges into the market, Finks phoned him.

Bears Met Terms

"He said, 'Well, we don't know what the (quarterback) situation is, but we don't want to know before we have to,'" Carter recalled. "He wanted to know if I was interested in coming to camp. I said, 'Sure.' So I talked it over with my wife, Judy, and we said, 'Well, let's see what would make it worthwhile for me to go to camp.' Finks met all my contingencies."

"The Board of Trade is the kind of thing that you can have a hot streak and leave for two months and come back and not miss anything, really. I figured I'd just come up (to camp) for a couple of weeks or a couple of months and see how it worked out."

It has worked out fine, and Carter is enjoying football more than ever. He credits it to the "Independence" provided him by his commodities trading position.

"I enjoy camp and practice and I don't let the things that used to get to me bother me," Carter said. "And if the knock came on the door and they wanted my playbook, I'd do cartwheels out to my car and the next day I'd be at the Board of Trade and it wouldn't bother me."

However, the Bears' winning habits this fall may have Carter thinking football more than he would like to admit. In his 10 years in the NFL, including several seasons marred by injuries, his only winning experience was when he led the Cincinnati Bengals to the playoffs in 1970.

He has never savored a winning season with the Bears, who drafted him in 1967 and gave him his first NFL exposure before he asked to be traded in 1969.

A Winner

Now he figures the Bears are building a winner.

"I would say if you gave last year a 10 per cent rating, this year I would say the Bears are at 50 per cent," Carter said. "If, say everybody played at 100 per cent of capacity, then they'd be winning the Super Bowl like Pittsburgh, every year. There's no question this team has that potential. Depending on how the breaks go, which determines a lot of momentum and confidence, they could end up at about 78 or 80 per cent at the end of this year. If the breaks don't go well, I think they'll end up at about 65 per cent. I would say a great season would be 7-7. If they do that, they ought to have a ticker tape parade down LaSalle Street."

"This could be my last year, or it could be one of two or three more in relief position. Winning is the only way to go and it's worth waiting for."

Pickers Ponder

Fifth Weekend

BY TIM SULLIVAN, RANDY WIEVEL, AND MIKE HABERMAN

For openers, the Chicago Bears and Jack Pardee chalked up three wins in a row! Maybe this is the year the Windy City wizards will put it all together. Who knows?

Well, the pre-season NFL schedule is just about over, and as the teams complete their finishing touches in preparation for the opening kickoffs that really count, we must admit that a few developments certainly have caught our collective eyes.

And then come the Dallas Cowboys, a squad many people think will make it back into the Super Bowl again. But wait a minute. Instead of spending their time getting that shotgun offense figured out, all we hear about is Roger Staubach and Clint Longley getting into a couple of fights. We knew they were an explosive outfit, but it seems to us they might be hitting the wrong people. Maybe they're trying to be the NFL's answer to the Oakland A's.

We're also learning more about Buffalo's offense, or to be more specific, their lack of one. If Buffalo can't straighten out the O.J. Simpson situation, they're gonna have the same problem the Mets did when they lost Dave Kingman. No runs means no wins.

And finally, don't look now, but it seems the two new NFL kids on the block, Tampa Bay and Seattle, are intent on trying to mess up our prediction average. One of our scouts came across an article which said that NFL expansion teams usually win three games in their first year. Sure enough, we checked it out and discovered that the Vikings were 3-11 in 1961; the Falcons were 3-11 in 1966; and the Saints were likewise in 1967. Tampa Bay already beat Atlanta this year.

Sullivan Haberman Wievel

Said Tampa Bay Coach John McKay: "I'm told the average expansion team wins 2.7 games in its first year. We'll spend our time trying to figure out how to get that point seven."

And while John's busy doing that, here's the way the fifth week of the pre-season looks to the Superpickers:

OAKLAND OVER SAN FRANCISCO — Snobbish San Franciscans like to put down Oakland by stating "There is no there there". When it comes to football players, there is. Raiders by 14.

CHICAGO OVER TAMPA BAY — After the Bears win 51-0, John McKay will get the opportunity to utter his famous post-game speech: "Those who need showers, take 'em".

PITTSBURGH OVER DALLAS — The only offensive Cowboy was (or is) Clint Longley. Wait until Staubach gets cracked by Jack Lambert! Steelers in 4 rounds.

MIAMI OVER HOUSTON — If the Astrodome gets any farther in debt, the Oilers may move their franchise to Kuwait. Dolphins by a fin (5).

MINNESOTA OVER PHILADELPHIA — There's a crack in the Liberty Bell, and the Eagle secondary ain't all in one piece either. Vikings by 15.

BALTIMORE OVER ATLANTA — It's the Colts in a romp as long as Bert Jones doesn't fly the team to Georgia. If he does, they might end up in Lichtenstein. Colts by 20.

The Superpickers

CINCINNATI OVER NEW ORLEANS — The winner of this clash gets a free copy of Paul McCartney's "Silly Love Songs". The loser gets the whole album! Bengals by 10.

SEATTLE OVER SAN DIEGO — If we're gonna pick the Seahawks to win, you better believe it's gonna be a pre-season game. Seattle by 1/2 point.

GREEN BAY OVER NY GIANTS — The Giants are already in mid-season form ... which means the Packers by at least two touchdowns.

LOS ANGELES OVER BUFFALO — Who would you take? A buffalo or a Polish Rifle? Knowing the Bills track record against bows and arrows, we'll side with Ron Jaworski by 17.

CLEVELAND OVER NEW ENGLAND — Pete Franklin, the Wizard of Grid, likes the Browns. Why argue with the gods? Cleveland by 6.

ST. LOUIS OVER DENVER — We were going with the Broncos, but one of our irreputable sources just mentioned that Denver has added Idris "Big Daddy" Amin, All-African linebacker to their roster. In that case, St. Louis by 222.

KANSAS CITY OVER DETROIT — Rick Forzano's offense has been just like Richie Allen lately ... missing. Should be the Chiefs on a Stenerud field goal.

WASHINGTON OVER NY JETS — If you put three All-Pros on the Jets' defense, they'd still have to come up with eight other guys. The Skins should enjoy this practice. Washington by 18.

Bears Food Service is Blue Ribbon

The Bears may be enjoying success, but they hope it doesn't go to their heads. They know it hasn't gone to their stomachs. They may be winning more, but they're eating less.

It's not because they don't like the culinary delights prepared by Executive Chef Curtis Rector and the Szabo Food Service at Lake Forest College. In fact, they drool over the sirloin, T-bone, prime rib, rib eye, shrimp, spare ribs, turkey, chicken, pork chops, lasagna, red snapper, and roast Long Island duck they've been getting since July 10.

Last Supper

It's just that they have matured. "Last year they ate like a bunch of rookies," said Bob Kaemmer, director of food service. "They ate everything in sight."

That's because they were a bunch of rookies. Many ate figuring if they got cut, at least they wouldn't have to worry about where they'd get their next meal for a while. They ate like every night was the last supper. For many, it was.

LINE SERVER Liz Thorby puts the finishing touches on a camp lunch.

"Now, they eat very balanced meals, not excessive amounts of anything," said Rich Chapman, assistant director of the food service.

"Somebody must have talked to them during the offseason."

There were two somebodies. Trainer Fred Caito and weight coach Clyde Emrich. There was no formal instruction, "but Clyde and I talk to them all the time about watching what they eat, staying on high protein diet and being careful about their weight," said Caito, who works with Kaemmer in developing the menu.

It's a football player's menu — lots of meat, salads, fresh fruit, vegetables, no quail under glass. It is not exotic, but in a restaurant it would cost $30 a day to eat like a Bear.

Their Favorites

Kaemmer estimates each player takes in 5,000 to 6,000 calories a day. There are no vegetarians. To prove that they watch their weight, there is an open ice cream bar that many players have the willpower to walk past.

"Beef in any form is the most popular," said Chapman. "We can figure a pound of meat for lunch and a pound and a quarter of meat for dinner. If the hamburgers are quarter pounders, they take four. If they are half pounders, they take two. They know how much they are eating. If they don't, they ask."

By popular demand more steaks and prime rib are being served, but if there is anything that goes even faster, it's shrimp. They don't eat much fish, although it would be good protein for them, but shrimp is another story.

"We had shrimp cocktail one night and they ate 1,600 pieces," said Kaemmer. "That's 80 pounds."

"We put out 50 pounds one night and the first 35 guys through the line took it all," said Chapman.

The players appreciate the efforts of Rector, baker Dick Schrimpf, second cook Bill Claman, breakfast cook Donna Trifunovich and cook and baker Javier Cervantes and go out of their way to hand out compliments, according to Kaemmer and Chapman.

"They'll even walk downstairs to find us," said Kaemmer.

The Food Crew

It takes a team of 15 to 20 employees to handle preparation and serving, including cafeteria supervisor Sharon Radley, line servers Myrtle Ranson, Betty Powers and Liz Thorby, salad preparer Conni Radley, utility men Danny Veljkovic, Rafael Hernandez and Jose Silva and line checkers Andy Dolan and Tom Powers.

The compliments from players prompt Kaemmer and Chapman to "do more special things," like baking victory cakes.

"The Bears want the players to feel they deserve good food and good service," said Kaemmer. "That's the impression we get handed down to us. It's not to the point yet that we have linens on the table, but who knows?"

It has reached the point that birthdays are noticed. "That was Jack Pardee's idea," said Chapman. "He's conscious of things like that."

Ballboys Best

It used to be easy to tell who ate the most during training camp — the teenage ballboys. One kid once consumed 13 steaks at a sitting.

"That's when the ballboys used to have contests to see who could eat the most," said Chapman. "They're not allowed to have contests anymore. They decided their main goal was not feeding ballboys."

ANSWERS TO SUPER SPORTS QUIZ NUMBER SIX

1. c — The Redskins made the Eagles look like a Super Bowl contender, as Philadelphia pounded them 26-10 and 26-3.

2. b — Linebacker Harold McLinton dented the end zone on November 3, 1974 after catching a 14-yard pass from the Packers' Jack Concannon.

3. d — Simpson had the best rushing average (5.5 yards) among regular runners, but technically, Kansas City's wide receiver Larry Brunson was the best. Brunson picked up 89 yards on two end-arounds for a 44.5 average!

4. c — James Harris of the Rams threw the strikes and was voted MVP.

5. b — The Eagles' Joe Lavender went 36 yards for one touchdown and Frank LeMaster sprinted 89 yards for another score against Washington.

6. c — Cleveland defensive tackle Walter Johnson explained: "I had a headlock on the bear and looked down and saw the muzzle on the floor. Then I let go and beat a hasty retreat for the door."

7. Another trick question, and we'll give you credit for either Payton or Osborn. Chicago's Payton led the NFL with a 31.7 yard average (444 yards on 14 returns), but Minnesota's Dave Osborn returned a kickoff 38 yards on his only attempt.

8. a — John Henry Johnson gained 4383 yards from 1960-65. Franco Harris should pass him this season.

9. b — Hill drove John Mecom's (Saints) entry to victory at Indy in '66.

10. d — The Saints' first Pro Bowler was safety Dave Whitsell. Whitsell, an ex-Bear in 1961, made the Bowl in 1967.

Pre-Season 1976 - Game 5

Chicago Bears at Tampa Bay Buccaneers

August 28, 1976 - 7 p.m. CDT

Tampa Stadium - Tampa, Florida

On Saturday Chicago becomes the second NFL team to come to Tampa Stadium in 1976. Since being dedicated in 1967 there have been four other pro pre-season football games in the Stadium, including Tampa Bay's Homecoming last week against Miami.

SRO

It was a standing-room-only crowd of 71,718 that turned out to see the Dolphins stop the expansion Buccaneers 28-21. The loss lowered Tampa Bay's exhibition mark to 1-3, the victory coming against Atlanta, 17-3, the week before.

In the Miami contest, Dolphin quarterback Bob Griese threw three touchdown passes in the first half to put his club in the lead before retiring for the second half.

On its first three possessions, Griese tossed TD passes to Jim Mandich (three yards), Howard Twilley (ten yards) and Larry Sieple (six yards).

But former Chicago placekicker Miro Roder kept Tampa in the game with three field goals (19, 45 and 47 yards). Buccaneer quarterback Steve Spurrier added two touchdown passes of his own: to back Vince Kendrick (nine yards) and tight end Larry Burton (26 yards).

First Win

Coach John McKay's team celebrated its first-ever NFL win on the road in Atlanta. Spurrier, who was obtained from San Francisco in the Buc's first trade last April, scored the first touchdown against the Falcons on a one-yard run. He then directed a 70-yard drive which culminated in another one-yard score, this time by Essex Johnson.

Buc Stats

After three games, Buccaneer statistics showed running back Louis Carter (formerly with Oakland) as the leading rusher (32 for 114) ... he also had the most receptions (six for 36). In the passing department, Spurrier was 25-40 for 260 yards and only one interception.

Building

Prior to the start of their first season, the Buccaneers received veteran experience in the offensive line via the veteran allocation portion of the NFL stocking program.

Several of the vets, including Mike Current (Denver), Dave Thompson (New Orleans), Howard Fest (Cincinnati) and Ira Gordon (San Diego) were starters with their former clubs.

In addition, five-year performer John Ward (Minnesota) adds experience at both center and guard, while three-year tackle Dave Revis (Pittsburgh) and four-year center Dan Ryczek (Washington) will also vie for starting jobs.

On defense, the top ends are Pat Toomay (formerly with Dallas and Buffalo), number one draft choice Leroy Selmon and veteran Council Rudolph (St. Louis). At tackle, two players came through the veteran allocation — Dave Pear (Baltimore) and Bubba Bridges (Denver).

The Bucs' linebacking corps includes: former Bear Jimmy Gunn, former Cowboy Cal Peterson and former Dolphin Larry Ball. In the middle are Steve Reese (N.Y. Jet) and Steve Calavito and Bubba Broussard.

Hello Abe

On John McKay's Tampa staff is former Bear head coach Abe Gibron. He is working as the Buccaneer's defensive coordinator as well as coaching the defensive line. Also on the staff is offensive back coach Phil Krueger, at one time an assistant with the University of Illinois football program.

John McKay

After leaving his head post at Southern Cal John McKay had these comments: "After studying a lot of NFL game films I've made one conclusion: the pros make the same mistakes as the college players. They both drop the ball, they both miss tackles and they both fumble. It sort of retains my idea that football is not a perfect game. Pro players probably work harder at the game than do the college players, who have more distractions on campus."

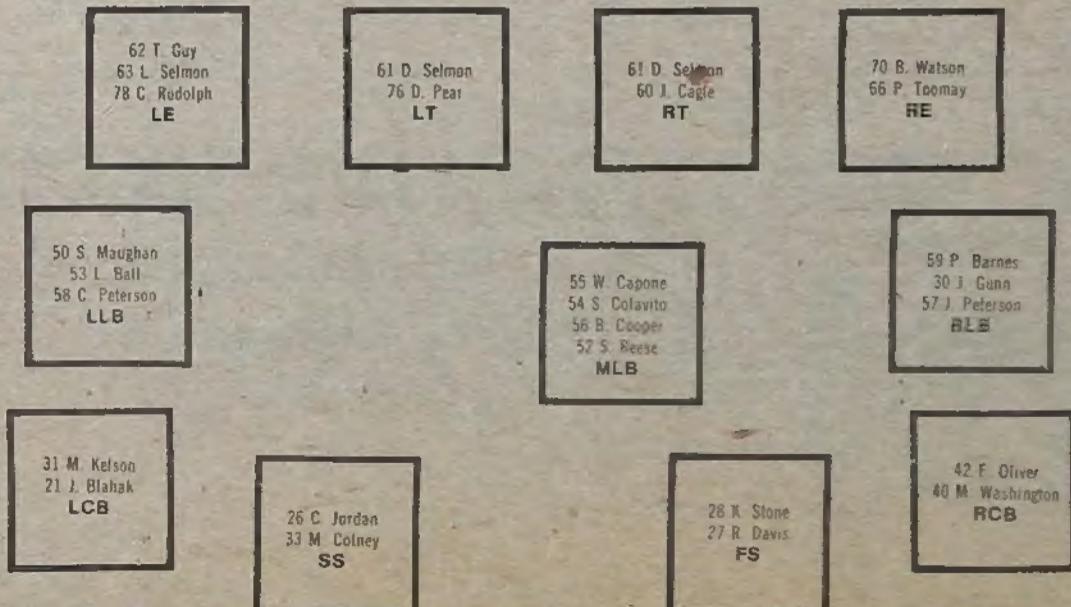

The Bears' Injuries

Only defensive end Roger Stillwell (knee) missed the St. Louis game because of an injury. His availability in Tampa will be question answered late this week. The Bears are 3-1 this pre-season after losing 20-14 to the Cardinals.

Jiggetts: Excited by Pro Football Challenge

Dan Jiggetts had a lot of things to think about. The rookie tackle from Harvard had drawn Wally Chambers in a one-on-one pass blocking drill. He was remembering to keep his body low and his feet moving and to use the proper techniques, and all of a sudden none of it mattered.

"I forgot that Wally had jet burners in his shoes," Jiggetts said, laughing at the memory. "I was thinking so much about technique that he went right past me."

Jiggetts hasn't seen all that many defensive linemen run past him since joining the Bears as their sixth-round draft choice. "He's learning everything quickly," coach Jack Pardee says. But then, there's a lot to learn at offensive tackle. Linemen can't add up against defensive changes the way backs and receivers can.

"Offensive tackle's the hardest position for a rookie to learn and start at," says Jeff Sevy, who started there as a rookie last year because he had a year of WFL experience.

Harvard

At Harvard, it was enough for Jiggetts to be 6-4, 256 pounds. He was all-East as a senior and all-Ivy League three seasons. Last year he captained the first Harvard team ever to win an all-Ivy title, and he was among the national leaders in the 35-pound weight throw, hurling it 62-feet. "If they put benches on the field and had us press a bar, I could take on anyone," Jiggetts says, smiling. "But it doesn't work that way."

So Jiggetts is a freshman again.

The Challenge

"It's exciting," he says. "There's something there that challenges you. Every time you drop back for a block, you're trying something new. That's what practice is for. You learn by experimenting."

"I'm learning what I can do and what I can't do, and under conditions I never could have had in college. Getting beat's not so exciting, but the most important thing you can get out of practice is to learn from your failures. You learn how to push yourself and how to concentrate, to push to a higher level than you thought was possible."

While he's pushing himself, Jiggetts also pushes Lionel Antoine, who starts ahead of him at left tackle. Dennis Lick, whose draft position yielded him a new Porsche to Jiggetts' three-year-old Grand Prix, is doing the same thing to Sevy at right tackle. "They're making better tackles of our starters and better defensive linemen of the guys playing against them," Pardee says.

in cities because I was farther away. I think I can see things a little more clearly from that perspective."

When he became Harvard's first black football captain last season, his concern was that it might have been well-timed considering Boston's busing problems. Even if it was poorly timed considering it was Harvard's 102nd football season.

Living close enough to the ocean to smell the salt, Jiggetts developed an aesthetic appreciation that has accompanied him into the basest of jobs. He is a complex man who can be as happy photographing the lake shore scenery as he is knocking a defensive lineman's block off.

A SUCCESSFUL START . . . rookie Dan Jiggetts waits to shake hands with Colt linebacker Stan White following the opening home win of 1976. That's Mike Adamle in the middle. (Photo by Bill Smith)

Jiggetts has been surprised at how much help he gets from veterans he's trying to take jobs from. He and Revie Sorey, the starting right guard, have been almost inseparable. "They're the first ones on the field and the last ones off," Pardee says of the rather oddly matched pair. Jiggetts, bespectacled and good looking, looks quite at home with a pinstriped suit and a serious expression. Sorey's idea of dress clothing is something comfortable to dance in.

Last year he and his roommates built a darkroom in the home they rented.

Photography

"Photography really provides a creative outlet," he says. "After dinner every night, you've got to go over your plays for 45 minutes. They're important, but it's nice to finish the night with something that's a more stimulating kind of reading. Lately I've been reading all I can about the CIA thing."

What matters to the Bears is that he has his Xs and Os down. "He's the kind of guy who looks like he could run all day and not be tired," offensive line coach Ray Callahan says.

"When I came here, I figured there was always the possibility that I might not make the team," Jiggetts said. "But I decided to put that at the back of my mind, and if I don't make it, it won't be because I didn't try hard enough. That decision took a lot of weight off my shoulders. Then I could just relax and go to it."

A Good Start

The Bears' 25-14 win over Baltimore (Aug. 14) was the third straight victory in 1976 and the best season's start for a Chicago team in 16 years.

Colt head coach Ted Marchibroda commented following that game: "We got beat by a better team. The Bears made very few mistakes. They moved the ball against us well because they were aggressive. They're winners and played a fine football game."

"We just couldn't stop them. (Bob) Avellini has certainly helped the Chicago club and (Walter) Payton is going to be a great runner with a year under his belt."

Offensive Plays

Through three games, the Bears had compiled interesting ball control statistics: Chicago ran 227 offensive plays as compared to 153 for their trio of opponents.

Home Field

Chicago head coach Jack Pardee expressed appreciation of the home fans after the Baltimore win: "The great crowd was appreciated by the players and coaches. We felt them behind us. Soldier Field was a neutral field last season. It helps to have the crowd support."

Game Balls

With every Bear victory during the year goes the awarding of game balls. The Baltimore win meant those awards going to defensive line coach Brad Ecklund and the team's starting backfield — Bob Avellini, Walter Payton and Roland Harper.

Breaking Up

Safety Doug Plank experienced a dose of double-trouble in recent developments. During a weight lifting session (Aug. 12) he tripped backwards and dislocated the little finger of his left hand — he tried to break his fall. Seven stitches were needed.

Then in the Baltimore game Plank again fell and came up with another broken finger, the small finger on the right hand. A matter of three days and two broken fingers, a bang up job.

Offensive Linemen

John Niland, who spent nine seasons at Dallas before shifting to Philadelphia last season in his 11th NFL pre-season camp. The 32-year old guard told a visitor: "The toughest part isn't the pounding; I sort of enjoy that. I think it's the overall pace, getting up at 6:45 in the morning and going until 10:30 at night."

"When training camp comes, you've got to force your mind to do it or you won't do it in a game. Things like bed check, curfew, attending all the meetings, your chin strap buckled, it's all mental."

"I think you'll find offensive linemen are a very unique breed. We've got to be more disciplined because what we're doing is unnatural . . . I mean the blocking. Next to the quarterbacks, we have probably the most difficult job of anybody. Especially the guards."

"We're always at the point of attack . . . always hitting. And I think you'll find we're a little more intelligent. I don't mean superior intelligence. Playing guard you're asked to do the impossible, and that's what makes the game exciting."

After Three Games

Chicago was one of five NFL teams still undefeated after three 1976 pre-season games (the others being Oakland, Pittsburgh, Los Angeles and Miami). The Bears had scored the second highest number of points (67) in the National Conference during that time.

Other Domes and Things

Green Bay's trio of Steve Odom, Johnnie Gray and Steve Luke are sporting the Telly Savalas' dome look (as is the Bears Richard Harris). Asked how long they (the Packers) intend to keep their heads clean-shaven, Luke replied: "Odom says until we go to the Super Bowl. I'll try, unless it gets cold . . ."

Don Heinrich, former NFL quarterback and assistant coach, is the analyst for the new Seattle Seahawks' radio broadcast team.

Rams' strong safety Dave Elmendorf on the mental pressures of pro football: "At the end of a season, it's not the physical exhaustion, it's the mental exhaustion that tells you it's time for a vacation. Your body and your legs may be fine, but your brain is worn out."

The Carters: A Partnership That Works

The scene shifts to Salt Lake City, Utah. The 1964 Brigham Young University football team has just pulled off the biggest upset in BYU history, with a stunning win over 7th ranked Utah State.

The camera zooms in for the victory celebration down on the field. Homecoming queen rushes up to handsome all-America quarterback, throws her arms around his shoulder pads, and cries, "We won!" Handsome all-America quarterback gives homecoming queen a responsive hug and shouts, "We did it for you!"

Judy and Virg

A romance is born.

You've seen the plot at least a thousand times before on television and in the movies. But somehow, Virg and Judy Carter have made it work in real life.

They've made it by doing what most football husbands and wives rarely find the time to do.

Virg and Judy Carter have made it their business to stick together, as a team, in just about everything they do — short of playing football.

"I'd probably have done that too, if I could have found a pair of shoulder pads tiny enough to fit me," said Virgil's petite wife, who, at age 32, still appears young enough to squeeze in for half-price at any local movie.

"We got used to going everywhere together almost as soon as we met; speaking as Jane and Joe all-America at Brigham Young," she said. "Then, when we came to Chicago and saw all the marriages in pro ball failing apart, we both realized it was because, more often than not, the husband was out travelling, maturing, and developing, while his wife was stagnating at home with the three kids."

Partnership

Virg and Judy realized then, if their marriage was ever to be as close as they both wanted it to be, they would have to form a lifetime partnership. Which meant if a future employer wanted to hire Virg, he'd simply have to sign Judy along with him. Both Carters together, as a package deal. Or neither one of them at all.

"The partnership came naturally, because I was interested in the same things as Virg," Judy said. "He'd come home with films to study the different defenses he'd be facing, and I'd sit there watching with him all night, on the edge of my seat, as if they were some feature length science fiction thriller."

Virg would serve as the projectionist, running through each 16-millimeter film, free of charge, explaining all the defensive tendencies to his partner along the way.

But the one tendency that stuck out most in Judy's mind was her husband's own tendency to welcome her into his world.

"A psychiatrist friend of ours once told me how very lucky I was to have married a man who doesn't feel threatened to make me a part of his own existence," Judy said. "She told me most men would be afraid to give out all that information, for fear their woman just might learn as much, or even more than they themselves already know."

A Part of His Life

Not Virgil Carter. He wanted his wife with him on that never-ending banquet circuit, talking about defensive tendencies to the countless Lions, Kiwanis, and Boys Clubs four nights out of every week.

And when a Milwaukee data processing firm wanted to enlist the Bears mathematically-minded quarterback to program a statistical study on football, Virg insisted that they also draft his mathematically-minded wife to code all the plays.

"Believe it or not; I coded the entire 1971 football season," Judy said, with that tired look in her eye. "Which included every single play, of every single game, of every single team, considering every one of over 53 variables that might effect the final score," (field position, down, wind velocity, time, etc.)

Virg would then program all of Judy's coded facts and process them through the computer to find out the final outcome.

The computer team of Carter and Carter toured the country, lecturing and organizing data processing seminars for the next three off-seasons.

And shortly after the study had run its course, the next prospective employer came banging on their door. Only this time, it would have saved Virg and Judy a whole lot of heartache if they could have programmed and processed the outcome in advance.

The Fire

"The WFL may have been the newest league in professional sports," Judy said. "But the Chicago Fire offer not only offered Virg a chance to call his own plays and be his own quarterback. It also gave him the opportunity to own part of his own team."

Which, in turn, gave Virg the luxury of hiring his own employees. Once again, his wife Judy was the first to get the job.

"We were hired as a team again on a three-year contract, to do all the public relations, and TV and radio interviews for the Fire," Judy said. "And for the next twelve weeks, we were sitting on top of the world."

"The team was winning, the fans were coming out, and the new league was gaining even more acceptance than any of its founders ever hoped for."

Bear Rookie Keeps Team in Focus

Instant Replay

by Kevin Pates
Bear Report Editor

Here's a question that didn't make the Super-pickers quiz this week — and it's a toughie.

There are three members of the Chicago Bears that attended Texas A&M on athletic scholarships; name them.

Head coach Jack Pardee, OK, that first one was easy. The second is newly returned linebacker Ross Bruppacher, and the third, well ...

"I'll have to be fair and tell you that he is not a Bear player, but he is at every practice and every game; give up?

If the name Mitch Friedman doesn't exactly rock your football memory that's all right, he's just a Bear rookie.

"In the past all of the Bears training and game films were done by free-lance moviemen and as a result the Club had no processing facilities of its own," he continued.

"That was my first piece of business then, to set up my own film center. I chose the basement of Ferry Hall, at Lake Forest, as the most suitable for my needs.

"There was a lot of remodeling that my assistant (Chris Richards, a Lake Forest student) and I had to do as we worked to install $35,000 worth of processing equipment. It was the fourth such project I had worked on.

"In two months, and just a week before camp opened on July 12, we were operational," Friedman said.

Since then, Ferry Hall has been a busy place for Friedman and Richards. Selected Bear practices and all games, home and away, are filmed and then processed immediately.

"I don't shoot practice films just for the sake of shooting — it's done only when the coaching staff thinks it necessary," Friedman explained.

"One of the advantages of having a full-time film man is the immediacy involved. We can have practice films available in 45 minutes; while the game films take just a few hours."

Mississippi St. and the St. Louis (football) Cardinals. He also had done the official Cotton Bowl movies.

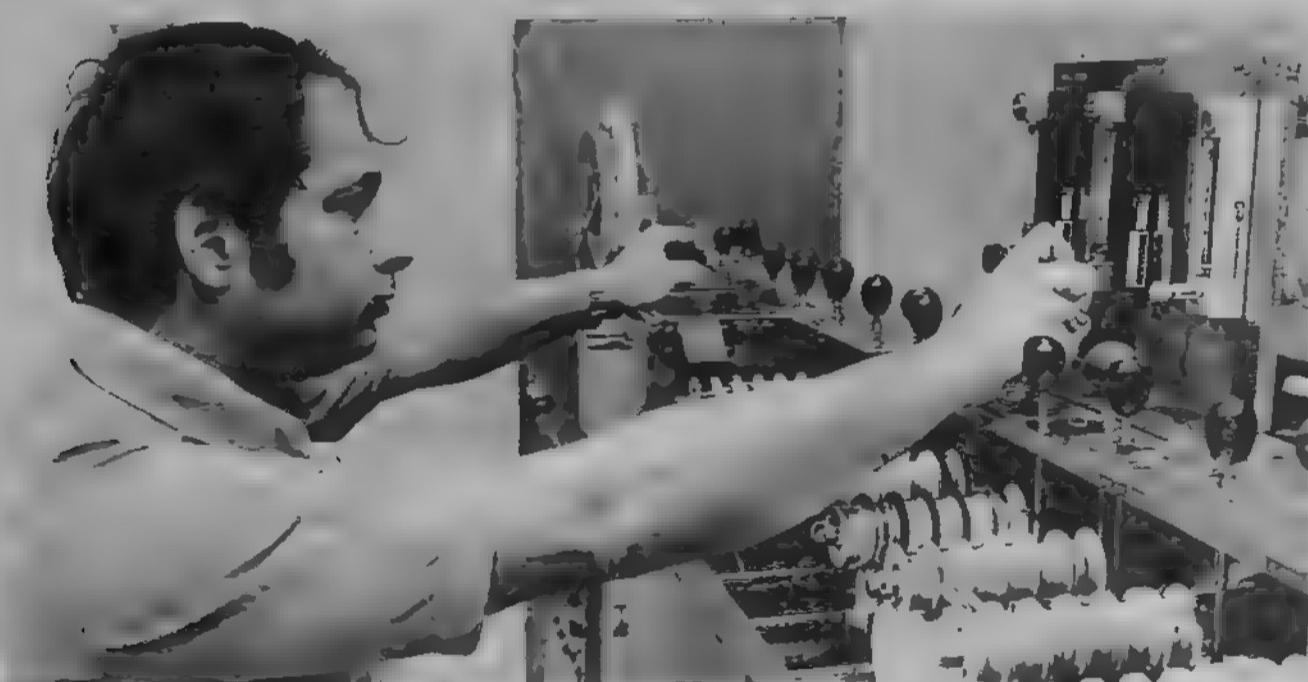

"In 1960 he started working, part-time, for the Dallas Cowboys and since 1972 he's been their full-time film director."

The filming Friedman family also includes brother Max who handles the football coaching films at Southern Methodist University.

Trips to nearly all of the NFL stadiums have provided some interesting moments for Friedman, but none as memorable as last year in Houston.

"I was free-lancing with NFL Films and one of my assignments was an Oiler home game. I'm not afraid of heights, but filming from the gondola hanging inside the top of the Astrodome is just not my idea of fun."

It takes a lot to scare one of those good ol' Aggie boys.

Mitch was hired by the Bears' management this season as the Club's first full-time film director. And that scholarship is for real. He was offered the Aggie grant to shoot and process their football training films.

"At the same time I also taught a photography class in the journalism school at A&M," said Friedman, a 1970 business management graduate.

Following graduation, Mitch spent time as a free-lancer in addition to working two years (1973, 74) for the Houston Oilers.

"After I left the Oilers I was contacted by Mr. Finks (Bears general manager) and he offered me the job in Chicago," Friedman said.

Friedman's films are also edited to provide excellent training camp aids for the next year.

"All similar plays, on our game films, are put on their own reels during the year. Then at the end of the season we will have 20-games worth of individual plays, they are great visual teaching aids."

The art of photography is something Friedman became interested in through his father, Bob. For years his family had worked in "dealing with commodities" as Fred Sanford explains — otherwise known as the junk business.

"Dad started the family business in Clarksdale, Mississippi," Mitch said. "But he was also an avid photographer for years. And as a hobby he would do work for Ole Miss,

Meet The Big-Wigs:

Who Owns The NFL?

By and large, they are energy czars, industrialists, attorneys, or family members of pro football's own self-made ruling class, these men who own and operate the 28 teams of the National Football League.

They are unique individuals, these men. They represent millions of dollars worth of investments, and almost as many interests.

For some owners, an NFL club is seemingly a weekend retreat from the rigors of "nine to five." For others, the NFL is a way of life, a job in itself. Based on won-loss results, it is often a simple matter to separate the hobbyists from the true professionals, but that in itself is another story.

Read on and learn of the men who own and operate the teams of the NFL. You may find a few surprises contained in these necessarily brief thumbnail sketches.

AFC

Baltimore Colts - Robert Irsay, Colts' President, is a heating, ventilating and air conditioning magnate, who, through Joe Thomas (Colts' GM and vice president), was presented with an idea to acquire the L.A. Rams and trade for the Colts. In 1972 the extraordinary transaction came to pass. New York Jets - Jets' President Phil Iselin is also President of Monmouth Park Jockey Club. The Oceanport, N.J. resident is also involved in many community charities. Miami Dolphins - Joe Robbie, Dolphs' managing partner, was a Minneapolis attorney representing a client interested in obtaining an AFL franchise for Philadelphia. The AFL suggested Miami, the client balked, and Robbie took the Miami franchise for himself in 1965. New England Patriots - William Sullivan, Jr. is Pats' president. He serves as a director of both NFL Properties and NFL Films. His Boston oil company does $76 million of business annually. He is a former P.R. man for his alma mater, Boston College. Buffalo Bills - University of Michigan law school grad Ralph Wilson, Jr. is President of the Bills. Wilson once owned a minority interest in the Detroit Lions. He also owns a stable of Thoroughbred race horses, not to mention his reluctant race horse O.J. Simpson.

Houston Oilers - Oilers' President "Bud" Adams heads a business complex of some 15 companies engaged in the oil business, farming and ranching, automobile sales, real estate, securities and other related interests. He has been sole owner of the Oilers since the team's inception. Cleveland Browns - Browns' owner Art Modell is a former New York advertising exec and TV director. He served as NFL president from 1967 to 1970, and is currently shouldering the expense of refurbishing Cleveland Stadium, home of the Browns, which he has leased from the city for the next quarter century. Pittsburgh Steelers - Art Rooney, Steelers' Chairman of the Board, has held the Pittsburgh reins for decades. He is the owner of a Thoroughbred race horse stable in Maryland and his five sons control three major race tracks - Liberty Bell Park, Yonkers Raceway and the Palm Beach Kennel Club. Cincinnati Bengals - Bengals' President, John Sawyer, is the son of former Secretary of Commerce Charles Sawyer. He heads his own company (J. Sawyer, Inc.) and often flies his own plane to Bengals' away games.

Tampa Bay Bucs - Hugh Culverhouse, Bucs' President, is a senior member of the firm of Culverhouse, Tomlinson, Mills, DeCarion and Anderson with offices in Jacksonville and Miami. His interests include real estate, banking, life insurance and the steel industry. Oakland Raiders - Over a 16 year span, Al Davis, Raiders' managing partner, has been an assistant coach (Chargers), a head coach and general manager (Raiders), Commissioner of the AFL and now principal owner of the Oakland franchise. He knows pro football, inside out. Kansas City Chiefs -

Lamar Hunt, Chiefs' President and first AFL figure to be enshrined in the Hall of Fame, is a petroleum multi-millionaire who has contributed greatly to the growth of the AFL, NFL, World Championship Tennis and the North American Soccer League. San Diego Chargers - Chargers' President Eugene Klein fathered the National General Company (20th largest in California) before divesting his interests there to devote full time to the Chargers. Denver Broncos - Gerald Phipps, Broncos' Chairman of the Board, was elected vice president and treasurer of California Electric Power Co., which later merged with Southern California Edison Company, which he became director of in 1963.

NFC

St. Louis Cardinals - The son of former team owner Charles Bidwill, Sr. (a Hall of Famer), present Cards' managing general partner Charles Bidwill, Jr. has seen his club leap to respectability during his four year tenure. New York Giants - A former classmate of the late Vince Lombardi, Giants President, Wellington Mara, has been involved with the club for many years, as has his family. Dallas Cowboys - Another wealthy Texan is Clint Murchison, Cowboys' Chairman of the Board, whose three original employees - Tex Schram (President and GM), Gil Brandt (Vice President) and Tom Landry (Head Coach) are still guiding the team's fortunes today. Philadelphia Eagles - Leonard Tose, Eagles' owner, bought the team for $16 million in 1969. Tose is a trucking executive and president of Patterson Canning Company. He once personally contributed $79,000 to preserve the varsity football program in Philadelphia's public schools. Washington Redskins - Prominent Washington attorney Edward Bennett Williams is Redskins' President. Williams figured in Woodward and Bernstein's "All the President's Men" as principal attorney for the Washington Post.

Detroit Lions - Grandson of Henry Ford, Lions' President William Ford, is the youngest of Edsel Ford's four children. He hopes to be best remembered for taking the Lions to suburban Pontiac, Mich., site of Pontiac Stadium. Chicago Bears - Except for Navy duty in WW II, George Halas, Bears' Chairman of the Board, has spent his entire life working for Bears. He founded the club in 1920 and coached the team for 40 years of its 57-year existence. Green Bay Packers - A publicly owned team, the only such structure in pro sports, the Pack is governed by a seven man Executive Committee, which former Green Bay Mayor and real estate executive Dominic Olejniczak heads. Minnesota Vikings - Ironically, the Vikings' president is named Winter - Max Winter, who this year marks his first decade of service in that capacity. He is former GM and President of the Minneapolis Lakers Basketball team.

New Orleans Saints - Son of oil millionaire John Mecom Sr., John Jr., this year ends his first decade of service to the team as President. He was formerly involved in automobile racing. A Mecom owned race car won the 1966 Indy 500. Seattle Seahawks - A socially prominent family in the Northwest, the Nordstroms, own majority interest in the Seahawks. Elmer Nordstrom, family spokesman, observes that football is a business whose "problems are different" but whose solutions are similar to those of his other considerable business interests. Los Angeles Rams - His Baltimore Colts recorded 16 winning seasons, his Rams have won three straight NFC West crowns and seem headed for a fourth. Carroll Rosenbloom, team President, is active in the leadership of the NFL and has proven to be one of the game's shrewdest administrators. Atlanta Falcons - Rankin Smith, chief executive officer of the Life Insurance Company of Georgia, is Falcons' Chairman of the Board. His grandfather was one of the founders of the company and Smith is one of the nation's most successful insurance magnates. San Francisco 49ers - A family controlled team, Louis Spadia acts as managing partner of the 49ers. Founded by the late "Tony" Morabito, the 49ers are controlled by a limited partnership with the major interest held by Mrs. Raymond Fox and Mrs. Victor P. Morabito (wife of the deceased younger brother of "Tony" Morabito). Of the 28 franchises, this is the only one known to be on the sale block.

Got somewhere from $15 to $30 million lying around the house? Over 80 percent of NFL franchises are financially successful, and four more will become available in the next few years.

Judy Carter

The rest is bitter history.

Virgil Carter severely dislocated the index finger of his throwing hand, ruptured three discs in his back, and faced the likelihood of open-back surgery. The Fire did a fast fizzle with its starting quarterback out of the line-up. And the entire World Football League did an even faster disappearing act shortly thereafter.

Time to Think

It was while watching Virgil lie flat on his back those next six long months, that Judy finally came to appreciate just how much time her husband's life in football gave the two of them to be together. And that their eight-year football partnership was not going to last forever.

"If it weren't for football, we wouldn't have had the chance to get to know each other as well as we do," Judy said. "And that, more than anything else, makes me sad to think of it ever coming to an end."

In spite of Virgil's renewed status as the backup to Bear's starting quarterback Bob Avellini, both Carters have already begun preparing for that inevitable end.

Judy has founded her own interior decorating firm (Judy Carter Associates, Virgil Carter vice-president, of course), and she's well on her way to earning an interior designing degree at the Harrington Institute in Chicago's loop.

And Virgil is busy wheeling and dealing commodities on the Chicago Board of Trade. He's even gone so far as to have a telephone installed in his training camp room, so he can keep an eye on the market from the Bears' camp in Lake Forest.

"Ultimately, we'd like to find another profession that allows us to work together as a team again, like we have all our years in football," Judy said. "We just enjoy each other's company so much, it seems like the most natural thing in the world to do."

It is the most natural thing in the world to do. Just like the homecoming queen giving the all-American quarterback a great big victory hug. The only difference is, this one's for real.
